Constructed of glass, steel and decorative stone, measuring 100 feet wide by 650 feet long, Grand Central Depot rivaled the Eiffel Tower in Paris and the Crystal Palace in London as the most dramatic engineering achievement of the 19th century when it was completed in 1871. Featuring a classical facade, a unified 16,000 square foot waiting room and distinctive ornamentation (cast-iron eagles with 13 foot wingspans, etc.), it was the largest train station in the world, as measured by the number of platforms. Extensive renovations and new construction transformed it in 1913 into Grand Central Terminal, with 67 rail tracks and 44 platforms on two levels (all underground), putting this busy behemoth into a league of its own! Still one of the country's most active transportation hubs, it features great markets, shops and restaurants. Don't miss the famous clock in the waiting room or the terrific painted ceiling above it.
